THE PSYCHOLOGY OF COLOR

1. SLIDE: Today, I will tell you color meaning in marketing and brands.
   This subject includes color psychology.
   Color psychology is the study of colors in human behaviour.
   Colors are effective when making a purchase decision.

2. SLIDE: Each color has a psychological meaning.
   It is important to decide which color defines your brand.
   Color psychology can help build a strong, acceptable brand.
   As a result, choosing a proper color for your brand means sending a true message to your target mass.

3. SLIDE: For example, if you have medical supplies store, you need the customer's trust.
   If you have an idea of color meaning in psychology, you can choose the correct color for your brand.
   Blue is the right color for this store that sells supplements because it refers to trust.

4. SLIDE: There are eight colors primarily used in brands, and each of them has a different meaning.
   As we said, blue is one of them.
   It means trust; now let's learn which color has which means.

5. SLIDE: RED
   Red can capture attention. The red color meaning is excitement, passion, energy, danger and action.
   Red used over 60% of retail brands.
6. SLIDE: RED BRANDS
   For example, Mc Donalds, coca-cola, and also for energy and excitement, meaning brands are Formula 1, Puma, Toyota, and Mitsibushi.

7. SLIDE: ORANGE
   In color psychology, orange represents creativity, adventure, enthusiasm, success and balance.
   Brands relevant to these emotions use these colors on their logos.
8. SLIDE: ORANGE BRANDS
   For example, Harley Davidson uses orange on their logo, so they refer to adventure.

9. SLIDE: YELLOW
   In color psychology, the color meaning of yellow revolves around sunshıne. It refers to the feeling of happiness, positivism, and optimism.
10. SLIDE: YELLOW BRANDS
    Brands are primarily in the service sector because their messages are relevant to customer happiness, for example, best buy, Shell, and DHL.

11. SLIDE: PINK

    Pink is a popular color for brands that primarily serve a female audience. In color psychology, pink's color meaning revolves around femininity, playfulness, immaturity and unconditional love.

12. SLIDE: PINK BRANDS

    Hello Kitty and Barbie are famous brands which use pink. Also, Victoria Secret's brand Pınk and a journal of women Cosmopolitan, the pink brand.
    They send messages to women and girls.

13. SLIDE: GREEN

    In color psychology, green is highly connected to nature and money. Growth, fertility, and health are some positive meanings of green.

14. SLIDE: GREEN BRANDS

    Using green brands referring to foods are Subway, food basic, and Starbucks.
    There is an interesting thing about this topic. BP is an oil company. Everybody thinks petrol stations are anti-environmental companies. They chose green because they wanted to change this image.
    Banks and finance companies like TD Bank mostly use green in their logos.

15. SLIDE: BLUE

    Blue is the most popular color in brands. In color psychology, blue's color meaning is feeling close to the sea and the sky. Stability, trust, peace, calm, and freedom are just some of the feelings for your customers.

16. SLIDE: BLUE BRANDS

    Social media brands like Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn, and Skype want to send messages to their audience is freedom.
    Technology brands like IBM, Dell, Intel, and Hewlett Packard; finance companies like American Express, Goldman Sachs, and Paypal use this color to send a message about how trustable they are.

17. SLIDE: PURPLE

    In color psychology, purple is a royal color. Purple connects to power, luxury, wisdom, spirituality, and nobility.
    Brands can use color to signal a superior service, product, or experience. But purple can also represent decadence, moodiness, and excess- so take care to strike a balance when using this color.

18. SLIDE: PURPLE BRANDS

    On Hallmark Logo and the top navigation are purple. The same message belongs to Premier League. They have power and nobility.

19. SLIDE: BLACK

    And our last color is black. Black is a popular color in retail companies same as red. In color psychology, black's color meaning is power, elegance, sophistication and symbolic of mystery.

20. SLIDE: BLACK BRANDS

    Such as Channel, Gucci, and Prada. Their images are elegant and sophisticated. Black is rarely seen in the health industry because it resembles death and mourning.